for itself, still, notwithstanding this extreme and inadmissible concession, the objection fails, inasmuch as "onr fathers" not only saw clearly that the Constitution as they framed it was very far from perfection, but, acknowledging frankly what they clearly saw, urged the adoption of the Constitution by the people on the avowed ground among others that it would be easier to amend the Consti-Iution if established than it would be to establish a more perfect one at the outset, commending their work expressly to the improving hands of the men of later generations, under the infallible direction of time and experience. In other words, "our fathers" themselves, wiser than the Times conceives, imposed on "the present generation" the very task from which our contemporary would have "the present generation" shrink in deference to the "wisdom" of those glorious sages of the Rejublie. On this point we beg to lay before our readers the subjoined quotations from the concluding number of the Federalist. Tho number is from the pen of Alexander Hamilton: Concessions on the part of the friends of the plan, that it has not a claim to absolute perfection, have afforded matter of no small triumph to its enemies. Why, say they, should we adope an imperfect theory? Why not amend it, and make it perfect before it is irrevocably established? This may be plausible, but it is plausible only. In the first place, I remark that the extent of those concessions has been greatly exag-
